

This work is showing...

This work is showing what Black Solidarity is and how activist encouraged African Americans to celebrate this day, while other people didn't go to school or stayed home all day because of how dangerous it can get. Black Solidarity was not a violent day, it was a day where African Americans had the feeling of unity between black people who have the same interests, goals, etc.

This Means to me...

That african americans were strong back then and although some knew that they would get hurt or even die, THEY STILL FOUGHT FOR THEIR RIGHTS. I'm happy that we were able to make our own holiday, a day where we can be together as one instead of multiple. Although I never knew about this day, it seems very powerful and makes me want to celebrate it whenever it comes again

My connection to this post are...

- Fraternities
- Sororities
- Activisms
- New generations
- Never giving up
- Being proud
- Culture
- AFRICAN AMERICANS

